I agree with the recommendation that the reference should be dropped. What's not said in the attachment is that the references to NAESB have already been dropped from the latest AS2 version. NAESB, in it's infancy, partnered with AS2 in order to make the standard more widely accepted. There was a lot of discussion within the subcommittee meeting as to whether or not NAESB should pursue getting the references to NAESB standards put back into AS2. The general feeling of the subcommittee was that we're able to make the split without impacting the current standards due to the current install base. The result was the recommendation drafted below.
